

Abstract

Process for producing thermochemically modified starch

5 The present invention is in the technical field of physicochemical starch modification and relates to a process for producing thermochemically modified starch, the thin-boiling starches which are obtainable by the inventive process and thermally reversible gel-forming dextrins, and to their use, in particular as gelatin substitute or fat substitute.

10